Hunter Harig is a 2013 Master of Public Health graduate from the Department of Community and Behavioral Health at the University of Iowa. Hunter recently completed his Peace Corps service in Mozambique where he worked as a health volunteer. In Mozambique, he worked toward improving access and quality of HIV, STI, and malaria services as well as providing organizational support for various community based organizations and a local and state health department. Hunter's primary areas of interest are social determinants of health, malaria, and HIV.

Individuals with disabilities are encouraged to attend all University of Iowa-sponsored events. If you are a person with a disability who requires a reasonable accommodation in order to participate in this program, please contact the College of Public Health in advance at 319-384-1500.
